Autodesk HomeStyler: Design Homes Of Your Desi.A proposed approach to assess sources of child abuse and neglect in the general community. This study explored a method to assess community-acquired child abuse and neglect using medical records of children in an integrated health care delivery system. Logical system categories were derived to direct appropriate medical records review and specific forms were developed to assess the source of maltreatment. One hundred and thirty-five medical records of abused and neglected children were reviewed from a defined population. The sources of maltreatment reported on the forms included parental conflict, extended family conflict, physical abuse (spanking or beating), physical abuse (hitting or hurting), verbal abuse (calling child abusive names or making degrading comments), verbal abuse (threatening to hurt or kill the child), emotional abuse (making the child feel bad about oneself), lack of attention or care (mother not attending to the child, mother not providing enough food, mother not providing adequate clothing), lack of knowledge about the child (mother not knowing the child's medical history or not knowing how to keep a child healthy, mother not knowing the child's current living situation or not knowing where the child lives), and lack of support or supervision (mother not knowing where the child goes to school, where the child gets breakfast, where the child sleeps at night, or not being told about the child's activities). The results of the study indicate that the developed forms accurately capture a specific quality of the malt 3e33713323
