Q: Extracting subnet from IP Address I have an ip address in the form of an integer. In C++, how can I extract the subnet from this address? I.e. I have an IP address 0.0.0.0 and I want to extract 0.0.0.0/8 A: It is not a standard way of C++. But you can use some library like boost::lexical_cast, std::stringstream or boost::regex or boost::regex_matching (by using boost::regex_search): #include #include #include #include #include #include #include const char * ipStart = "0.0.0.0"; const char * ipEnd = "255.255.255.255"; boost::regex_match_t m("([0-9]+)\.\{3\}([0-9]+)", boost::regex_constants::icase); boost::smatch what; if (boost::regex_match(ipStart, what, m) && boost::regex_match(what[1], what[2], what[3])) { // print (what[1] + "." + what[2] + "." + what[3]) std::stringstream s;

patients despite negative cytology findings ([@B7]). The first published case report by Choi et al. ([@B8]) showed radiographic resolution of the mass lesion after treatment with antibiotics. Although not all cases resolve as described, the diagnosis can be established if the patient is successfully treated for other bacterial infection. As presented in this report, we could still find the possibility of local recurrence after initial successful treatment. To our knowledge, there has been no previous report of local recurrence caused by Ralstonia pickettii infection. The majority of cases of Ralstonia spp. have been associated with bloodstream infection or pneumonia. It is difficult to state with certainty whether this is a true local recurrence of the fistula or due to secondary infection. Culture of the area of recurrence is necessary to determine the infectious etiology. If there is no evidence of local recurrence, antibiotic treatment alone would be adequate. However, if the mass, though small, is attached to surrounding structures, surgical intervention is indicated. We report a case of Ralstonia pickettii infection mimicking an epidermoid cyst in the orbital floor. Ralstonia pickettii is a gram-negative rod that is part of normal skin flora. However, this organism can also cause infections in immunocompromised individuals, especially after surgery and due to association with other bacteria. Early diagnosis and treatment are key to avoiding surgical intervention. The authors state that they have no Conflict of Interest (COI). We thank Dr. Kiyoshi Kondo (Department of Ophthalmology, Osaka City University) for providing the clinical and histopathologic photographs of the case. <sup>[^1]</sup>: Correspondence to Dr. Hirotsugu Ohtani, Q: Question about FET transistors Can anyone explain me why all of these circuits work? A and B will be assumed to be constant voltage sources. A: It is assumed that the voltage between the collector and emitter of Q2 and Q3 is 50  $\sqrt{m}$  V\$. The resistors are chosen to act as a voltage divider to form a constant voltage. Vout will be at about 1.35 volts. A: Q1 is acting as a
