Developing and maintaining a content strategy By content strategy, I mean that you must decide what to create, deliver, and distribute for your users. This definition is somewhat subjective, as you can see from the preceding two definitions, but the term is used to describe the system you set up to manage all the content required to provide your users with what they need. It includes both the elements, which are items that you create, such as images and video clips, as well as the attributes, which are descriptions of those elements. Deciding on your content strategy is a major decision that can have a tremendous impact on your company. As outlined in Chapter 7, making this choice will help you create an effective website that is relevant and useful to your users. These important decisions determine the content that you need to create or capture from users. If you decide to use Adobe's Content Management System (CMS), you can use the Adobe Live Cycle Suite that includes Dreamweaver and the components discussed in Chapter 6. This suite is a one-stop-shopping solution for most small- to medium-sized Web sites. If you decide to build a site that uses Flash content, then you use the Flash Player System by Adobe, which provides the tools that you need to create and distribute Flash content. Making sure you have the necessary elements to make your content strategy work can be a challenge for new web content creators. As you work on your CMS, which will be discussed in more detail later in this chapter, it is imperative that you don't forget to include the other elements that are necessary for the content strategy to work. The elements needed to make your content strategy work include the following: Content: The content of your site is everything from text to graphics, and it includes the images and other multimedia to support those graphics. The content can be owned by you, created by you, or rented by you. Descriptions: The descriptions that go with the content are the reasons for the content; for example, the heading for an image gallery or the description for a banner ad. Metrics: These are the numbers that show how many visitors the site receives, how long they spend on the site, how many people see a particular graphic, or how many people add a product to their shopping cart. Metrics can

Passengers warned of 'technical difficulty' at OR Tambo International Airport Share this article: Share Tweet Share Share Share Email Share PRETORIA - Passengers at OR Tambo International Airport reported “technical difficulty” on Sunday morning, after a major power outage affected its operations for at least one hour. According to an RTA spokesperson, the power outage was caused by an underground accident and occurred around 07:00. “Passengers are advised to check the status of their flight with airlines, and re-board at their scheduled time,” he said. When The Star visited the airport around 09:45, passengers were already waiting outside, with a few sitting on the tarmac, waiting for a flight to depart. About five flights were waiting to take off from the arrivals section. The passenger terminal was empty, except for a few business class passengers being de-boarded by airline staff. There was no sign of the massive power cut that passengers had told The Star about on social media before the outage. One passenger, who did not want to be named, said she told a duty manager about the power outage. “They told me it was a technical problem and that the power would be switched off, and then they called the fire brigade and told us to stay where we are,” she said. “There was no change in weather,” she added. Two travellers at the airport told The Star that they had never experienced a power outage at OR Tambo International Airport before. A passenger waiting to board a flight said passengers were given sandwiches and water. “It is quiet, no one is coming in or out and it is calm,” she said. Another passenger waiting for a flight to depart said that she and her friends were told they could not board their flight unless their luggage was checked-in. She said she was told the airport was affected because of a power outage and that a man had fallen into the underground river. “We are stuck here but we cannot leave until we are checked in,” she said. The passenger said the arrival hall was largely empty, with one airline staff member who was doing his job in the arrivals area. A spokesperson for the taxi association said taxis were arriving to pick up passengers, but no cabs were allowed to pick up passengers from the airport. “Some of the taxis left but
