5. Click the New Layer button ( ) on the layers palette's far right edge (Figure 14-16, top) and choose Solid Color from the palette that appears. The Background layer appears on the Layers palette. You can see the Solid Color layer at the top of the stack. You can choose any color to create a new layer, but for this exercise you'll choose a color that is not associated with any object in the image, such as white or gray. It's more likely that you'll want to create a new layer that has some contrast to your subject or scene. If you already have a dozen layers or so open, choose Solid Color to create a new layer.

6. Click the Brush tool (B) at the bottom of the tools palette, then click a dark gray area in the image to apply that color to the layer. It appears in the foreground, indicating that the new layer is the foreground of the document. After making a solid color foreground layer, you see the painting tool options that appear in the options bar above the layers palette (Figure 14-16, bottom).

7. To indicate that this new layer belongs in the lower layer group, choose Layer from the Brush tool options, as shown here. At this point the Background layer is placed in the layers palette. Notice that only the Layer choices appear in the options bar.

8. Press the Backspace key to delete the Background layer. The Background layer is gone from the layers palette. You see the black hole in its place. Figure 14-16. Top: If you have a document open with many layers, it's easiest to create a new layer with the Solid Color tool. Just click a spot on the canvas that is neither on the subject nor in the background of the scene. Set this new layer's mode to Overlay, and it will automatically appear in the foreground of the document. After you've created the solid color layer, you can use the Brush tool to paint it. You can also choose Layer from the Brush tool options if the brush has already been loaded with a color. Bottom: If you need a new layer to act as the background of your image, you can create a new one with the Solid Color tool.

9. Choose a brush with some texture and paint a few more thick areas of color, such as

Ortho-dihydroxy-3-methylcyclopentane-1,1,3-tricarboxylate synthase In enzymology, an ortho-dihydroxy-3-methylcyclopentane-1,1,3-tricarboxylate synthase () is an enzyme that catalyzes the chemical reaction 4,5,6,7-tetrahydro-2,2-dimethylcyclopenta[2,1-b]furan-3-carboxylate + oxalate Hence, this enzyme has one substrate, 4,5,6,7-tetrahydro-2,2-dimethylcyclopenta[2,1-b]furan-3-carboxylate, whereas two products, 4,5,6,7-tetrahydro-2,2-dimethylcyclopenta[2,3-b]furan-3-carboxylate and oxalate, are formed. This enzyme belongs to the family of lyases, specifically the oxalyl-CoA-lyases, which cleave carbon-carbon bonds. The systematic name of this enzyme class is 4,5,6,7-tetrahydro-2,2-dimethylcyclopenta[2,1-b]furan-3-carboxyl-CoA oxalyl-lyase (decarboxylating). This enzyme is also called 4,5,6,7-tetrahydro-2,2-dimethylcyclopenta[2,1-b]furan-3-carboxyl-CoA synthase. This enzyme participates in mevalonate and glycolysis - dicarboxylic acid pathways.
