However, if I use , it works. If I apply #content to an element, I can't style it, but that's the only thing I can find that would do this. I'm not sure what I'm missing in my coding/syntax, so any guidance would be appreciated. Here's a screenshot of what I'm working with: A: It is because you are using scoped CSS. .item is the selector used by the default WordPress theme (Twenty-Thirteen, in this case), and it doesn't accept custom classes. You would need to use @extend to apply the same styles to another selector if you want to modify it: .item { background-color: black; } #content { background-color: white; } .item, #content { background-color: white; } Would add black background to both. Sometimes you've got to do what it takes to get the job done. Unfortunately for our Army comrades, this includes some pretty heinous mass murders. Even a massacre designed to "ensure the elimination of a pesky American government, as well as the protection of American citizens from illegal immigration and oppression". After years of continuous warfare in Afghanistan, the Taliban managed to take control of much of the country. The terrorist group has pretty much erased the local government, forcing the U.S. to either stay and support the regime or get out. The latter option has led the U.S. to ship off all the personnel in Afghanistan and instead try to find some way to buy some time and support the Karzai regime. However, there's an issue. The president of Afghanistan is a full-fledged dope fiend. Drug traffickers are sometimes employed by the Afghan government, which makes the Taliban even more likely to revolt. Then again, it's much easier for them to topple the government in Kabul, if they can get the support from some of the opium dealers. According to the NYT, the CIA has hired a bunch of Pakistani killers to help us to kill the Taliban and the heroin dealers who support the Taliban. It's worth noting that this "strike force" is pretty much made up of Pakistani military agents. So there is the possibility that they may feel a little bit guilty about this mass murder plan and will immediately demand that Washington get them out of the "business". No way. This is what we pay them for, and the threats will come from Washington, not Islamabad. The NYT also says that there has been some resistance to the plan from the department of Defense. According to DoD, the assassination plan won't be fully operational for two to three years. For now, it's just a plan to "help us figure out how to get 'em". And I'm sure we'll find a way to get 'em in two to three years. The latest attack is supposed to kill two Taliban commanders who are really important folks, and also to "wipe out a large part of the Taliban leadership". BANG!
