Of all the quirks and complaints of comic books and the people who love them, one of the biggest gripes is the simple task of finding the next adventure. When most people want to dive into a new comic book they want to know what it is about, they want to read some previews, and they want to get back to work. Here are three things that you can do to help ease the burden of constantly finding new comics. 1. Subscribe to My Blog 2. Go to your local comic shop 3. Start an issue subscription service 3. Start an issue subscription service There are a lot of great comic book subscription services out there, and they do a lot of great things for the medium. They are great for holding collections and investing in one book at a time. Some offer them in bulk at a reduced rate. Others let you choose which titles you would like to receive on a monthly basis. A subscription service is a simple and easy way to expand your collection. Whether you decide to go with something like Bluewater Comics, DCT Comics, Diamond Comic Distributors, or Shwunk Entertainment, I suggest you give them a try. "When you raise taxes on a drug which is already so expensive, it just doesn't really help anybody. And for me, it's personal. I've been a cancer patient. So this is a personal issue for me. I do not support anyone's plan to raise taxes on cancer drugs because they are too expensive."
