The following is a list of roads that are still under the maintenance program for the Department of Public Works and Highways. The present invention relates generally to printing devices, and more particularly to a full color additive manufacturing printing device utilizing a laser light source. There are many known printing devices. For example, known printing devices include ink jet printers, wire-dot printers, thermal transfer printers and laser-dot printers. These printers are well known to those skilled in the art, and are available in various forms including serial printers, daisy wheel printers, dot-matrix printers and others. It is also known to fabricate three-dimensional objects by additive manufacturing.

In such systems, layers of material are sequentially bonded together through selective curing, in a layer-by-layer process, until a complete object is created. These systems are known as "rapid prototyping" or "rapid manufacturing" systems. Exemplary rapid manufacturing systems are described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,121,329 and 5,204,055. More recently, commercial embodiments of these rapid manufacturing systems have been developed. Currently, additive manufacturing systems utilizing energetic particles (such as ion beams) are not commercially available. A system using ion beams would not provide the necessary resolution to fabricate complex parts, such as medical implants or jewelry. For example, it is difficult to position a metal line close enough for the energy of the ion beam 3da54e8ca3
