Kelela – "Rocket" (official video) The London performer and electronic artist Kelela has been seen around the world thanks to her interpretations of soul and new wave, and her production is always thoughtful and moving. With a 2013 British EP that is consistent in its joyous and carefree spirit, she has recently developed a sound that is rich and deep, bringing melancholy songs like "Rocket" that are still full of whimsical optimism. Sebastien Tellier sampled her voice, providing a new instrument in the song. It has a playful looping vocal that adds charm to the straightforward and modern production, and the video further expands on the theme: on a wooden ship against a backdrop of clouds, a crew is sailing the seas, while a model of a rocket sits in the background. After nearly a year of (silently) waiting, the long-awaited Android 4.4.2 upgrade is out! Let me remind you, however, that not all Google apps are upgraded. Such is the case with Google's News, which, along with other mobile applications, failed to undergo the update. Speaking of which, this news comes straight from Google's official blog, where, among other things, the company confirms that, despite the introduction of Android 4.4.2, the new Marshmallow release will not be officially launched until mid-June. In addition, Google also explains that the old framework version will still be around for the next few months. Despite its revised features, Android 4.4.2 is quite similar to Android 4.4.1, with only bug fixes, security improvements, and minor tweaks. As for the Marshmallow release, it is still under testing and, therefore, should be released later on this summer. Keep it here for more information.
