This invention relates to a system and method of providing terminal access to a network. More specifically, this invention provides a remote access to a local area network (LAN) from a portable computer over a cellular radio telephone network. The use of portable computer systems is common throughout society. For example, portable computers are now used in monitoring nuclear power plants, chemical manufacturing and pharmaceutical laboratories, data centers, and military applications. With new trends in the marketplace and growing concerns for security and data integrity, there exists a need for reliable remote access to LANs. Remote access to LANs is currently facilitated using dial-up or leased line connections to a data communication service. Dial-up connections require that the user establish a telephone line connection to the data service provider. In situations where the user is mobile, i.e., cannot readily establish a direct connection to the data service provider via a telephone line, the user must make alternative arrangements to gain access to the remote LAN. Most organizations which employ the use of mobile computers are reluctant to rely on data communication services due to the cost of subscribing to such services, the time it takes to configure and establish the appropriate connections. Although leased line connections eliminate the need for the user to have a telephone line connection to the remote LAN, such services are still prohibitively expensive for the user. Moreover, these services usually require that the user establish a land line connection with a telephone company before remote access to the remote LAN is provided. Such services are not feasible for mobile users. The use of wireless communication systems is now common with mobile users accessing local networks, such as the Internet, via the use of a computer. For example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,295,170 and 5,375,178 disclose systems which allow a mobile communication terminal, i.e., a cellular phone, to be used to access the Internet over a conventional modem. These systems make use of a wireless communication link between the mobile terminal and a base station. However, each of these systems requires some form of a manually dialed number at the mobile terminal to access the local network. Other mobile system employing wireless communication links, such as a mobile facsimile machine, allow remote access to the Internet over a wireless communication link, such as a cellular phone. See, e.g., U.S. Pat. No. 5,272,514. However, these systems suffer from the drawback that the user must still manually dial a number before remote access to the Internet is provided. With the development

Southern California -- this just in State to consider changes in special-education laws Jun. 14, 2013 Written by After a public hearing, a state Senate committee Monday is expected to vote on new rules governing the controversial practice known as the Safe Harbor Law. The Safe Harbor Law allows children to be placed in private schools if their parents don't cooperate with the state in providing services designed to overcome learning disabilities. Parents of such students who have been enrolled since the 2002-2003 school year are eligible for such services. But under the rules that are under consideration, parents would need to maintain at least one-tenth of their child's instructional time in specialized schools. Parents could also be paid on an hourly basis instead of a monthly basis, under the proposed changes. California does not require a child to receive such services to be considered "otherwise eligible for special education." Ling Zhi, a parent of a Safe Harbor student who attended the hearing, said she is considering speaking out to educate the public about the detrimental effects of Safe Harbor. "I'm really trying to educate the public on this law and what the hidden consequences could be," Zhi said. Do you have a relative or a friend who attends a private school? Let us know. The last time the Devils missed out on a win, on 12/30/13 the Kings scored a 4-2 OT win. We have a win the next night and then lose the next. Not too good. 7:50pm: we score here in the 3rd and the Devils are back up by one! Break this dam! 7:48pm: 1st Kings goal, excellent early puck movement by the Kings. Devils have switched up the lines to try and match up a bit better. 7:46pm: The Devils have been aggressive in the 3rd, they've been out-shooting the Kings 12-
