Figure 1-1 shows the same image in Photoshop and other graphics programs. As you can see from the figure, Photoshop is the most flexible and robust program for manipulating photos, however, it's not the only way to get the job done. If you need to use Photoshop for something besides photo manipulation, you may want to check out Chapters 7 and for more about making images for printing and e-mail. You need to have Photoshop on the computer you're using to edit images in this book. You also need to have a photo or image file open in Photoshop. For more information on opening and saving files for editing, see Chapter 4. Figure 1-1: You can manipulate images with Photoshop alone, but you can also use another graphics program. As a graphic designer, you need to know how to open and save files because many graphic programs work the same way. In this part, I give you tips and tricks for opening and saving files in any graphic program. (There are many differences between graphic programs. Into the Valley, out of the Valley: News from the other side of the Silicon... - john_horton ===== sivers Related: Someday I hope to write a really good book about Silicon Valley. I'm focusing on the "other side" - what's happening outside of the valley. I'm a tourist, so my view is from the side of the valley. The big corporations dominating the valley are like: Larry & Sergey -> Google -> Larry Page, Sergey Brin. -100 People -> Google -> Jeff Schmidt, Marissa Mayer There are other, larger "make it happen" companies, but those are just different parts of the same huge ecosystem. All companies have to "make it happen", because there is no government to tell them to do stuff. If Google didn't want to take risk, it wouldn't have hired 70. But the 70 also helped shape how the company is today. After Google/Apple/Facebook/Twitter, who are the next "make it happen" companies? I suspect they are the ones starting up the next bubble. ---- tomp > There are other, larger "make it happen" companies Monsanto? ----- Umalu I've always thought that the "valley" within a valley is broader and more accurate. ----- falsestprophet Venture Beat seems to be the new N+1. Or the Gates playbook. United States Court of Appeals For the Seventh Circuit Chicago, Illinois 60604 May 29, 2006
