That letter requested that the Department of Defense certify this to Congress by July 10th. The letter continued: While we understand that the Administration has not yet received any certification that the F-35 engines would be used only for training, this is an unprecedented request, and it does not appear that the Administration has the legal authority to certify the use of these engines, which have only recently entered into service. If the Administration has authority to certify their use in the F-35 to Congress, we are prepared to review the procedures by which they intend to certify the use of these engines, and to seek to ensure that the certification process is
