out A: In general, you have to repeat the masking with or without the `std::regex::extract(str, filename)` API. I don't know if there's any way that you can avoid this, or if there's a way to construct regex that automatically does the masking on extraction. Some clarification is in order. A `grep` (or any equivalent program) only sees the bytes in your input file, so it only needs to know the number of bytes to seek backwards from the start of the file. It doesn't care what that means in terms of the original input file. The `std::regex` API, on the other hand, needs to match the regular expression to a string which may be longer than the input file. It also needs to match the same thing to a string which is at least that long. The only way that you can do this is to truncate the input file, and then rewind the file after each match. So the `std::regex` API can see a lot more than a simple `grep` can. However, there's no way around the cost of the rewind and the truncation of the file. That's a really costly operation. A much less costly approach is to read the file, and match the regex to each line one at a time, recording the offsets of each match. That's really what your `grep` is doing. Q: How to plot multiple columns in heatmap using seaborn in Python Pandas I have one DataFrame in Pandas as follows: group event level1 level2 A 0 0.0 0.1 0.0 A 0 1.0 0.0 0.1 B 0 2.0 0.1 1.0 B 0 3.0 0.0 0.0 B 0 2.0 1.0 2.0 C 0 4.0 0.0 1.0 C 0 1.0 1.0 0 3e33713323
