surface at the McMurdo Dry Valley Camp, which is located on the coastal region of Antarctica, has been going viral around the world this week after it was posted by a couple from the U.K. on Instagram. The lake has been dubbed "ice lake" by some news outlets because it's been so warm in the area. In fact, the lake was nearly melted during the day. A picture of the lake is worth a thousand words, but the duo have taken the shot to another level. They've even had a hand in creating an animation of the lake as it slowly melts over the course of the day. "Just to be clear, it's still winter down here in Antarctica, so the sun's still below the horizon and there's still plenty of darkness," Adrian Burlinson, an amateur photographer, told NBC News. "What you're seeing is a completely clear ice surface. It's what we call the 'ice lake'—the big ones usually melt pretty quickly in the summer, so it's quite interesting to see one in the middle of winter." According to the U.K. meteorological office, the temperature was just above freezing in the coastal town of McMurdo Station, which is the main hub for research in Antarctica, as of Jan. 12.

It's believed that the lack of clouds in the region is what has kept the temperatures unusually high. Another area that contributed to the warm temperatures was the wind. "Clouds over the McMurdo region have been very weak, contributing to temperatures very close to freezing," Rebecca Long, a forecaster at WeatherCheck, told The Atlantic. "Air temperatures over the coastal region are nearly freezing, which is a record high for January." The duo are currently working to make the photo a more popular one, so the video can be seen by more people.//
