The way the name is formatted is based on the registry, which is why you see that name instead of the original file name. The actual encoding is just used as a guess to make it easier to find the file. If you want to search the filenames exactly as you see them on disk, you need a file system and/or volume scan tool. A: You may be able to use some Windows Search Options... under Search Options> File Name Sorting Options you should be able to change the way files are sorted, by specifying "Any Encoding". Select Unicode (UTF-8) as the encoding to get the characters you see in your question. The icons in your screenshot look like they are from the "Unicode (UTF-8)" encoding. If you double-click the "Search Results in Files." button, you can see a history of your recent searches, sorted by name, and you should be able to search for "file name unicode" to see more Unicode files for that search term. The US Navy has sent a third and final destroyer to the Mediterranean Sea to assist support efforts against migrants who are trying to illegally cross the sea to Europe. The ship, USS Ponce, left Norfolk, Virginia, on Saturday morning, the Navy said. The workaround for this is to go to Control Panel\Hardware and Sound\Sound\System and delete the entries and the entry for "CARDAUDIO BTW", since this is the source of the "Customized" button. Then restart the computer. Urinary 3 beta-diol glucuronide excretion: values in healthy normal adults and children. The excretion of 3 beta-diol glucuronide has been determined for various age groups of normal adults and children. 3 beta-diol glucuronide excretion per mg of creatinine showed a progressive rise to 17 mg in the first year of life, 12-18 mg at age 2-5 years, and to 4-6 mg at age 6-10 years. Values in girls and boys did not differ significantly and the 4-6 mg/mg of creatinine value in adults seemed to be useful as the lower limit of normality. In 15 children with chronic renal impairment, the excretion of 3 beta-diol glucuronide did not correlate with glomerular filtration rate (P greater than 0.05). The technique is highly specific for 3 beta-diol glucuronide and is easily performed; it seems to be suitable for routine clinical application and complementary to other parameters of tubular function.Parvalbumin immunoreactive neurons in the pulvinar of the cat: cyto- and chemoarchitecture. The parvalbumin (PV)-immunoreactive (IR) neurons of the pulvinar were studied by means of the avidin-biotin peroxidase method on series of Nissl-stained sections. The pulvinar is innervated by a few cytoarchitectonically distinct nuclei which have been named dorsal (DL), ventral (VL), medial (M) and lateral (LL) by several authors. The relationship between PV-IR cell distributions and cytoarchitectural borders is discussed. On the basis of the morphological criteria used, PV- 3e33713323
