In November, we grew to 800 million monthly active users, and we have more than 1.32 billion daily active users. More than 800 million of these active users are on Facebook on mobile, and 600 million are on our Android app alone. We also have 230 million people on Instagram, nearly 200 million people on Whatsapp, 30 million people on Messenger and 11 million people on Oculus. We're the second-largest social media company with the number of daily active users. And we're just getting started. Today, we launched a variety of important product updates across our core products. To start, we're making Messenger available in 30 new languages, including Hindi, Mandarin Chinese, Tagalog and Estonian. People from more than 170 countries across the world can now use Messenger to communicate in their native language. In the US alone, there are over 50 million people who have a primary language other than English and more than 100 million people who are proficient in a language other than English. These are people with whom we want to connect. And we want to make it easy for them. We're also launching a series of product updates on Facebook.com, including the ability to look your friends up using your phone number, improve search for friends on Facebook, and make more friends. This is another way in which we want to make it easy for you to connect and grow your social networks. Last, we're launching the Oculus Go, a $199 VR headset designed for people who want the world's best VR quality at a price that's within reach. Once complete, we expect the Oculus Go will be a mass market VR headset for thousands of new VR users in the US. It's the first product in our new hardware journey, and it's only the beginning. Before I get into today's product announcements, I want to remind you that we're always working to ensure that our products are working as intended for you. So we're making a number of important product updates across Facebook as part of our ongoing efforts to make sure that you have a positive Facebook experience.
