As you may know, around these parts we value "facts." That's why we're a bit horrified to see videos of Melissa Etheridge performing the song "I Need to Know" with a terrifyingly realistic muppet, named "Dobie." In the video, the song's lyrics are projected on the screen behind the puppet's face as he stares into the camera and recites them with a creepy overacting affect. Needless to say, we're not so sure how much we can believe of his true feelings when they're projected onto a screen from his perspective. Watch: Melissa Etheridge performs "I Need to Know" with a frightening "Dobie" puppet Luckily for us, we were able to track down the video's director (he goes by the alias "Jennifer Coulter") to tell us his true intentions behind the video. Apparently, he wanted to visually represent the concerns many citizens have with the impending War on Terror. In short, he said it was "an attempt to not only remind people that we're approaching a milestone anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, but also really provide a forum to the current moment of extremism." Here's his explanation in full: "The video includes more than just music. It includes projections to represent the concerns of many citizens. Like many of you, I have been hearing for a while now the (Sept. 11th) anniversary is approaching, and I've also been hearing about 3e33713523
