

Office Regenerator 2011 Serial Number Txt2day

A: The serial number in Office is a value that is supplied by a license identifier on the CD. The license identifier is created by the manufacturer for use by your license management system. You provide your license management system with the serial number and it will provide the matching license information (e.g. expiration date) and create a license key for the serial number. You then upload the serial number to the license management system and the licensing system then generates a product key for it. The product key is a string of alphanumeric characters. It's interesting to note that the security system of Windows creates a license key for each product key. So if you have two product keys, the security system will create a license key for each one. For Windows, the NLAU.MGR.exe utility is used to create the license identifier. For Office, you'll need to use the OLE.dll and get the license identifier from the COM object that is returned. NLAU.MGR.exe -m "MySerial" -l "MyLicense" -p "MyProductKey" -o mySerial.txt Be aware that the above command only works on 32-bit machines. Some editions of Office 2008 and later only require the following command OLE.dll :C:\WINDOWS\System32\OLE.dll Office will create and save a file called mySerial.txt in the same folder as NLAU.MGR.exe. You can then load that text file into the License Management System to obtain the license ID. The license management system will use the license identifier and the product key to generate the license key. The official Microsoft documentation is here: 3e33713323
