For example, in 2015 there will be only 3 licenses available. The licensing department is still generating the list of the available licenses, so it is possible that a person will have two licenses next year as they were acquired over the last year but not before. The problem is that the existing list of licenses is for a hypothetical situation. For instance, there could be 12 people currently holding license A and another 5 people holding B, then the licensing department would change the list to 13 A, 5 B. Now, in the actual situation, it was 12 A, 5 B, but they change it after the evaluation for potential license. The ideal would be to make sure that each person only has one license at a time, but only the main person responsible for acquiring the license could access the list and then manually change it. Is this possible to automate, so that when the main person submits a new license request, it automatically adds a line in the list and the others checks for their existence in that list, and removes themselves if found? A: Yes, possible. Here's an example. In order to prevent misuse, we need to ensure that the license number is not duplicated. We also need to prevent anyone from adding a new license. In this case, the license number is stored in the table License. This example shows how to use a transaction to prevent anyone from adding a new license. CREATE TABLE [dbo].[License] ([Id] [int] IDENTITY(1,1) NOT NULL, [Number] varchar NOT NULL, [Work f30f4ceada
