The DNA pattern of 14 rhabdomyosarcomas was studied by the gel electrophoresis of DNA isolated from the neoplastic tissue. Unusual DNA ladders of various sizes were found in all the tumors analysed; moreover, a heterogeneous population of DNA fragments was demonstrated in two cases. Similar results were obtained when purified tumor DNA was separated by the agarose gel electrophoresis. These findings, which appear to confirm the loss of genetic information and the presence of an abnormal DNA pattern in these tumors, are correlated with some pathologic findings and discussed.

Ukraine: Why the EU should be concerned by the Ukraine crisis On February 21st, the third anniversary of the Orange Revolution, Viktor Yanukovych resigned from his position as Ukrainian President. This was a shameful political stunt. Yanukovych's resignation was a farce. He was still at the helm of the administration. His political opponents led by his predecessor, Yushchenko, were being assaulted and arrested by the police. The oligarchs were still collecting the billions stolen from the Ukrainian people. The situation in the country was catastrophic. Yushchenko's opponent in the presidential race, Yanukovych, looked on as the political opponents were attacked. At the same time, Yanukovych was consolidating his power and even appointing supporters to key positions within the government. The previous government had committed hundreds of corruption cases and even if his opponents were arrested it was too late. Yanukovych and his cronies had already won. The result of the March 2010 election was a shock. Yushchenko was the first President of Ukraine since the fall of the Soviet Union. Yanukovych's party won 80% of the votes. In the United States, one could see Russians celebrating this victory. But, why is Russia cheering this victory? Russia's Prime Minister Vladimir Putin has already installed Yanukovych as Prime Minister of Ukraine and Yanukovych's current position is seen as a forerunner to becoming Prime Minister of Russia. In the elections, Yanukovych's Party, "Party of Regions", won 80% of the vote. The main opposition party, Yushchenko's party, only won 13%. One of the main problems the Orange Revolution faced in the elections was that the people of Ukraine had never experienced the freedom of choice before. The oligarchs were used to subverting the political process in the country and they had the money and weapons to do this. But the revolution brought about a realization that people could vote and win. However, the current situation is worse than it was in the beginning of the Orange Revolution. People are still afraid to go out into the streets and speak out. The government
