The peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor gamma (PPARgamma) is a member of the nuclear receptor superfamily and represents a potential therapeutic target for the treatment of type 2 diabetes and atherosclerotic disease. However, because of concerns about the safety profile of certain thiazolidinediones, many have sought new, more potent nonthiazolidinedione PPARgamma agonists. In this paper, we describe recent progress in the design and development of nonthiazolidinedione PPARgamma agonists (troglitazone, tesaglitazar, tesamorelin, A-1154862, GW1929, D-145, and ELK-276), including synthetic studies toward these agonists, PPARalpha/gamma agonists, and structural studies toward PPAR ligands, and then compare the efficacy of these compounds and PPARgamma agonists troglitazone and pioglitazone for antidiabetic actions in preclinical and clinical models. Among nonthiazolidinedione PPARgamma agonists, ELK-276 is an example of a potent PPARgamma agonist that targets adipose tissue and possesses antidiabetic actions that appear to be different from those of pioglitazone, troglitazone, and GW1929, thus providing a novel therapeutic approach for type 2 diabetes.
