The post is usually written in the form of an article and contains images which may be viewed by the readers, who can in turn download the images. These articles are generally found on the news wires and are distributed to various sites which are commonly referred to as blogs. The author of these documents would usually use the name "blog writer", but a few hire specialized writers. Flippa is a major player in the world of real estate, showing an exit record of over $1 Billion dollars in one of the most active in the business. This website is a dedicated platform for bloggers as well as webmasters to enhance their blogging skills. It is an open resource which uses a common strategy to build the site. This strategy is specially designed to make it a complete solution for all blogging needs. Other services provide similar functions via their own proprietary software, or free software on a per-seat basis, typically with a focus on providing solutions that require minimal hands-on maintenance. Such a system is usually a software-as-a-service (SaaS), and where the code is available for download it is usually called a "Software as a service" (SaaS) application. This enables a third party to deliver or host computer software over the web. SaaS applications are typically hosted by a third party but can be self-hosted.
