Friday, October 30, 2010 I'm telling you... it just takes one glimpse to set in motion a motion for you to realize if this is going to be a great time for you or not. Just had this man contact me yesterday afternoon inquiring on several girls that I have rated a score of 95+ on my local dating site called www.Mosaic.net. I don't know him personally, only seen in a video chat at a local coffee shop a few times. He clicked on a link and was able to see exactly who I was, my latest pictures (nothing special but they are all better than his most recent pictures posted) and I could tell by his facial expression - he was completely awestruck with what he saw. The conversation was smooth and fast - after just a few questions he revealed that he is "in the market" for the wronged in life, he didn't want to get into too much detail yet, but thought it may be something he could apply with. He mentioned that he had dated one woman he really liked and she chased him too hard. I understood, she thought he was the one because her mother was being ill and his job might have changed at the time. I wished her the best of luck and we wished each other good luck too. He told me that he is now back living his best life and that his "Mom is feeling better." He then told me that he would click back on the Mosaic site after he talks to his boys tomorrow. In the video chat yesterday he could hear the excessive crying in the background as his son's birth mother sat in the corner listening to us chat. The poor man really enjoyed the conversation! I love my new found friend, and when I look at my "Meet Me" people list and see who is now interested in me... I absolutely understand why I'm not getting any calls here lately! I'm anxious to find out how our conversations went when he returns. It's amazing what a few simple words can do for somebody's life. It was new to me that these active men are so quick to want to discuss and connect with someone who is truly "good". Wednesday, October 28, 2010 "If it had not been for Nancy, I should not have taken this tea." Nancy is on a quest, to find the "Man of Her Dreams"! She responded to my ad about seeking a man in the northwest section of Los creating an immersive experience like no other.Q: CUDA and OpenGL relative primitive drawing with CUDA buffer I'm trying to develop an application using CUDA and OpenGL. I have a CUDA buffer and a ShaderProgram (program compiled in VertexShader + fragmentShader) that is associated with a vertexBuffer and a colorBuffer (both are successfully registered). My problem is that my OpenGL render function returns me a list of primitive draw calls and I want to add primitive push calls to my CUDA buffer. I know I can push a primitive with a CUDA kernel and render it with OpenGL with appropriate CUDA OpenGL bindings (I already have a working example where the kernel renders an object in a static CUDA buffer and renders it on screen with an OpenGl buffer). However, my problem is that I don't want to render all vertexes on screen simultaneously. I would like to render relative to the primitive's first vertex. So, my question is: Is it possible to provide the relative primitive's vertexes to the CUDA buffer using the ShaderProgram only? I would appreciate if you could give me a starting point. A: Yes, you can use the primitive topology information in the vertex attributes to render a primitive from the vertex content position. For example, if the primitive topology is

+----+----+----+----+----+ | | | | | |
+----+----+----+----+----+ | | | | | |
+----+----+----+----+----+ | | | | | |
+----+----+----+----+----+

Then a properly scaled primitive position range is (0..4) whereas it's left (0..0) and right (4..0) coordinate is zero in the vertex attribute data. You'd need
