Accelerometer technology has been used in a wide range of applications to detect or monitor movement.

For example, accelerometers can be used in a variety of motor vehicles (e.g., automobiles, trucks, trains, etc.) to detect a variety of conditions. For example, acceleration levels of a motor vehicle can be monitored to detect an occurrence of a collision. Conventional accelerometers typically include a mass/spring assembly that responds to an acceleration level to generate a voltage output. The mass/spring assembly may be fixed to a substrate and an external package, and as a result a sensitivity of the accelerometer to acceleration may be adversely affected by dimensional tolerances, variations in materials, etc. Furthermore, during the assembly of the accelerometer, the accelerometer is exposed to a range of temperatures and stress. This can cause a temperature, stress, or alignment drift of the mass/spring assembly. Furthermore, mismatches in a semiconductor device's reference voltage may also cause a shift in the sensed acceleration level.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to improved methods and apparatus for diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer, and, in particular, to new and improved methods and apparatus for the detection and treatment of diseases associated with breast cancer.
