In Planaris 2+, you're a polyomino, having to grow from a lowly polyomino into a full-blown polyomino. In Planaris 2 you were the shape, in Planaris 2+, you are the shape. Just like in Planaris 2, but now with better shapes, more depth, and higher stakes. Modes Play as a polyomino or as shapes and place your polyominoes anywhere on the grid. A line is connecting two polyominoes if they touch. If no shape is connected, you can connect it with an invisible line and grow until you get a line. Now, you've got five shapes, but you're only limited by your imagination: create polyominoes, break bricks and place them anywhere you want, play. If you would like some guidance through this, check the 'How to Play' section at the end of the game. How to Play Planaris 2+ is very easy to play with simple, intuitive mechanics that can be learned in 5 minutes. But after that, the depths of the game start to reveal themselves, and if you'd like to dig in deeper you can find the 'How to Play' section at the end of the game. Line-matching: When playing Planaris 2+, matching is intuitive, but it has two options:

- Match a line, if the bottom line is longer than the top line, you will clear that line.
- Match a line, if the top line is longer than the bottom line, you will clear that line.

Breaking bricks: Planaris 2+ uses a grid based on a 28x28 square grid. Because it's just a game, we limited how fast you can grow to only over 1000x1000 growth steps, so there are some rough edges. But Planaris 2+ also has a 'Free to Grow' mode, which allows you to grow at any speed, anywhere on the grid. There are four different types of bricks in Planaris 2+:

- Red bricks - Any shape can be used, the size of the brick doesn't matter
- Blue bricks - Big polyominoes can be used, the size of the brick doesn't matter
- Yellow bricks - Small polyominoes, and polyominoes with width == width of the brick can be used. Size matters
- Green bricks - Any shape can be used, size matters. Bricks can be matched in a match

Taking On Climate Change Earlier this month, New York City and Boston kicked off a series of discussions about how to help residents reduce their carbon emissions. The meetings were part of the climate advocacy initiative Cities for Climate Protection, which focuses on helping cities create sustainable development programs and programs to reduce carbon emissions. The organization was founded in 2007. “The world is rapidly approaching a point where cities will be an important part of developing new solutions to the carbon emissions crisis,” Patricia Doese, the founding director of Cities for Climate Protection, said in a statement. “Increasingly Americans, much like people the world over, are looking to cities for answers about how to solve problems related to energy, food, water, and climate change. Right now in the U.S. there are plenty of cities that are doing just that.” Cities are confronting a variety of issues related to climate change, as illustrated by this country’s most modern metropolis, New York City. The Big Apple, also the world’s most populous city with almost 8.8 million residents, has seen increased lawsuits related to climate change and sea-level rise and other issues caused by climate change. Seattle has also undergone a rise of complaints from constituents who are upset about Seattle’s climate. And while cities like New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Washington, D.C. have some history of responsive and proactive climate change policies, those urban areas lag behind other American cities when it comes to decarbonizing. City residents often notice more extreme weather conditions, like high heat, record-breaking storms, and drought. Last year, the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality concluded that Portland’s heating systems are causing the city to experience nearly every one of the natural battles of the 21st century—extreme heat, storms, droughts, floods, disease and sea level rise. No other country has urbanized the way the U.S. has. Its cities have ballooned to the size of small countries. Back in 2000, Americans city dwellers accounted for just 24 percent of the population. But by 2015, urban residents made up 61.3 percent of the population, and 74 percent of that urban population lived in America’s biggest cities. “Even within a narrow window of time
