In Study 2, we control for different language related to the stock returns and investigate whether this contributes to explaining the phenomenon. We show that there is a strong relation between the news and the headline in terms of not only the text the news contains but also the headline's impact on participants' beliefs and expectations. In addition to these findings, the headlines' impact on decisions depends on the initial beliefs and expectations of the participants. The implications are discussed with respect to the role of information in investment decisions. Love this recipe? Shout it from the rooftops
