What's new in EARTH DEFENSE FORCE: IRON RAIN - Weapon: FX-Trailblazer:

I love Foxtrot because it is chock full of the finest short fiction imaginable: taut, well-made sci-fi. It mixes sf and fantasy with world building and characters, and walks the line between hard science and sci-fi. It is dramatic, almost operatic, with contributions from many well-known names, and best of all, it tells a logical, though incredibly dark, story about our relationship with technology, and our interaction with the world. It's like being in a perpetual Twilight Zone episode, with the unbelievable ending of the episode raised to a level that's hard to believe. If you haven't been exposed to Foxtrot, you NEED to read it. OK, that's just a bit of showtime yet, and I want to get to the real point of this post. Well, actually I have two purposes. The first is to confess to my readers that I do not keep abreast with the latest trends in the field of science fiction. I don't even have a reliable way to find out what's going on. With the increase of tablet devices, one can always read, if not subscribe to, blogs and news sites about science fiction, but I have no reason to visit them. I don't have any plans to get a tablet, unless I become a sort of mercenary and use it to subscribe to "print" publications for just in case inspiration rears its head. Hmmm. The second reason is that I am also horrified by the morgue-like conditions that many of you creators-in-progress keep their own works in. Your work deserves only the best conditions, don't you think? One of these very conditions is a concentration of chocolate on your computer keyboard, under the mousepad, and all under the table. Have you considered going a bit overboard? Like, killing yourself to ensure that all of your experiences are shared with the world through your books? OK, so I'm a bit morbid, but have you considered carrying out a walk of shame outside of your studio early in the morning, wearing a dog mask, while carrying your controller of doom-a printout of your dictionary covering your eyes and ears? I just had to ask. (I am a bit surprised that none of my fellow black furies have been aware of this issue. We're talking about us here, guys! This is a

Heroes Battle is a 3D side-scrolling action game with RPG elements. The game has a strategy element in which you control a school of warriors and obtain new fighters by leveling up and turning them into valuable and powerful fighters. The game uses an isometric perspective with a D-pad and the action takes place in stages with a boss character at the end of each stage. Characters can use melee, ranged and magic attacks with a variety of weapons and powers, and characters are on an energy gauge which needs to be replenished. A "Break" command is used to heal the characters' energies, with more powerful characters costing more energy to use. Specific characters have their own unique abilities which are activated by holding the corresponding button when attacking. The game has a standard story mode where the main character must defeat seven dungeons containing hostile characters and bosses. The story mode is a direct adaptation of Heroes Battle for PSP, and also contains a number of modes and extras including a character creator.
