For those of you who use Spotify, EZBlocker 3 should seem pretty familiar. This continuously evolving ad-muting application could actually be mistaken for an add-on of sorts. Why? Simply because if you want to make use of your playlists as you intend, advertisements could get in the way, thus hindering your overall experience. Using EZBlocker 3, with its improved algorithms, could make a big difference. A more refined application The first and most important improvement over other similar apps has to do with an enhanced muting algorithm that in turn will prompt the app to detect advertisements more accurately. Its modern and simplistic UI will not have you scared at all. It is able to differentiate ads from the rest of your content by analyzing the Spotify window title. The application extracts the title and then checks to see if it changes using SetWinEventHook process. It doesn't really matter if you have or haven't used similar applications before. This particular one seems to try to offer a viable solution to ad-muting, fixing issues that have plagued the competition. Listen to your favorite tunes and once a pesky ad begins playing, the application will have already muted it. Once your track resumes playing, the app unmutes Spotify instantly. Adjusting various settings Now, this application also offers plenty of customizable features. Aside from the classical minimizing to tray or taskbar choice, you can decide if you want to unmute Spotify on close, check for updates, start
