Determining the origin of the latter-day sightings of Jersey cattle in Massachusetts. The mid-eighteenth century entries in the probate records of Plymouth County, Massachusetts, for cattle that died of natural causes, its offspring, or were killed by stray animals provide an important source of data for identifying the ancestry of some of the animals that survive in the wild today. In this study the general character of the cattle provided descriptions, which were then compared to those of cattle documented in the New England Colonial Animal Register from the seventeenth century to the present. From the reading of probate records and correspondence, the true identity of some of the 1790-1850 cattle known to be living in Massachusetts today can be determined. Keep your eyes on February's pages for the first look at the prequel's exciting, manga-inspired art. But now, give us a look at the artwork for a day in the life of the Cuties, written and illustrated by Kotoura-san's sister, -san. As we've seen in many of Kotoura-san's shorts, the Cuties are our protagonists. They're a band of five girls, plus their obliging butler, who perform normal girl-like things for a living: play music, act in plays, perform acrobatics, and even do a bit of comedy. Kotoura-san's latest anime-influenced manga features a different art style, written and illustrated by artist Sisa and coloured by her sister. The day begins with our girls enthusiastically strapping on their instruments, then heading off to the rehearsal. They sing along to the music they've chosen and practice their choreography; then, just as they're about to finish, they call the weather report. When the giant waves of winter's fury start to approach, the girls run off to be safe. They hurry to a boat waiting by the shore, where they spend the rest of the day singing and dancing happily. The second chapter, too, opens with a day out - on the town, of course! The girls are dressed in their finest - ballet dress, party dress, and schoolgirl. They meet fellow band members and dance along to the music they've chosen. Once the rehearsal's over, the Cuties stroll home in their winter outfits. They stop by to
