Ichor is a physics-based puzzle game set in a dystopian world. You are the only hope of the human race, a... A quick note, Ichor may have a lot of flaws. I say "may" because I personally think it's a damn good game, but could be far better. I'm writing this here because maybe this is exactly what I need to see if there is a place for me on this site. The game is in the public domain I originally wrote Ichor from 2013 to 2016 and was publishing a comic version online called World of Hysteria (However, because there was little traffic on the comic, and because I want to finish a game project first, I've re-licensed Ichor as a game that I can publish on more platforms (PC, Linux, Mac, android, iOS). In the comic, Ichor is an alien that has come to colonise us, and our only hope is finding the right use of fluid dynamics to defeat them. The sequel to Ichor should revolve around the capture of an advanced Ichor, and killing it. I just don't know where to take this from here... What I'm hoping for Obviously this is a one-person project, and it would be very difficult for me to reach the goals I have set without your help. I would like to be able to get this out on Mac and PC (not sure how much of an impact that might have), and ideally be able to do this by the end of May (2019). If anyone interested in the game or my involvement is able to help me out (production or marketing), get in touch! If you're a programmer, I have a specific idea for a project I'd be happy to collaborate on with you. If anyone is interested, get in touch! It's been a while, I know. I'm not sure if I have the motivation to write another dev diary, and I'm not certain what the chances of actually finishing the game are. As I've mentioned before, there was a problem. Maybe I shouldn't have published those 3 updates. Maybe that was a mistake, and it changed the pacing of the game and made it harder for me to finish. That's one possibility. Another possibility is that it was a good idea to start an update during a burnout period, but an even better one to let it fade out of my mind.
