life supports 2,300 jobs, $1.3B in income, $41.6M in taxes The Great Lakes Nongame Fish Council's annual report underscores the importance of preserving critical fish habitat for the economically vital sport fish industry. The Great Lakes Nongame Fish Council (GLNFC) published its 2017 annual report on Wednesday, highlighting the importance of fish to Lake Michigan communities and the related impact on the Great Lakes' economy. The report highlights the significance of maintaining and enhancing the quality of Great Lake fishing and its vast economic benefits, including jobs and

$1.3 billion in income. “The Great Lakes Nongame Fish Council is dedicated to the preservation and enhancement of Great Lakes fish habitats,” said council president Phil Yonker, executive director of the Northbrook-based group. “We report annually to show how the status of Great Lakes fish is increasing in both numbers and in the quality of their habitat.” The report noted the annual returns of the Great Lakes sport fish, including walleye, bass, perch, and muskellunge, which once supported vital fishery populations. In fact, the sport fish industry is a $1.3 billion, 7,800-job industry in southeastern Michigan. The tourism revenue generated by sport fishing and the related boat and tackle businesses also has a $41.6 million impact on Michigan’s economy.
