At a later date, we'll be releasing the full details on how this function works and how it's being used in FIFA 22. So far, we're able to confirm that it will be used for many of the game's new features, including the goalkeeper animations, the ins-and-outs of FIFA Ultimate Team, and the brand-new Player Preference System. In this feature, we look at the significant changes to the FIFA 22 Player Experience System. It's been redesigned to better suit the high-intensity and competitive nature of the game, and to reflect the way players are using it in real life. How it works We've split the Player Experience into three key areas to provide players with a clearer sense of what they're expected to accomplish, and to help them track their progress. The three areas are: Home, in the Mix, and Away. Home FIFA Home is now a hub of content. It includes an expanded all-new Features section, which introduces the most important game-changing features in FIFA 22, as well as the Approaches tab, which includes detailed information on player performances over time. The Approaches tab, which gives you a view of players' off-pitch progress, is particularly useful as it's being used by football clubs worldwide for scouting players, as well as providing an accurate snapshot of individual players' progress, both on and off the pitch. Moreover, we're introducing a new Home Highlights feature: we've partnered with the award-winning media company Mova to deliver video highlights that share the same high-quality video and photography used in its award-winning football videos. The Approaches tab also features a new Cross-Platform Analysis tool to show how your particular club's approach has and will perform in the new FIFA generations of players. The tool analyses the off-field stats of players for every club (and every club in the selected generation of the new FIFA). You can see how each approach's players perform relative to the transfer market in their generation. In the Mix Every week, you'll be able to access a wide selection of content in the Mix, including new Training Routines, New Player Stories, New Customize Experiences, New Team Records, and Highlights of the week. The Mix even includes videos highlighting the new Agents feature, which gives you
