Acne vulgaris and rosacea are inflammatory skin diseases. The pathogenesis of acne is due to the defective follicular keratinization which may be as a result of the interaction of free fatty acids released from sebum with the epidermal skin barrier. Rosacea is also mediated by free fatty acids and is more intense and tends to have a cyclic nature. The main cause of the rosacea of today is the excessive use of alcohol. Although it has been accepted that acne vulgaris and rosacea are different, there are no satisfactory studies showing that they are two separate entities or one with a strong association with the other. A combination of the two have been observed and this article is an attempt to bring out these similarities and the distinction between them."I'm at the top of my field!" "It's not you, it's... the other chiropractors?" "I could do a lot better if I'd had a little more practice." "I'm too good for this! I want out of this business!" Sound familiar? Ouch! You have likely seen your share of chiropractic business owner quotes like these. In the pursuit of new customers, you must sometimes step out of your comfort zone. Sometimes you need to stretch. In your marketing efforts, you may try something new. If you want to successfully market your chiropractic practice, there's a very real chance that you
