A protocol for the study of the retention and function of mouse embryonic fibroblast (MEF) cells in culture. A simple, reproducible and widely applicable protocol is described for studying the optimal methods of culturing mouse embryonic fibroblasts (MEFs). The protocol takes into account the need for some degree of differentiation of the fibroblast cell line as well as the degree of cell adhesion required for normal function and permits the simultaneous detection of many aspects of the culture in a single experiment. The paper describes the results of 35 experiments on MEFs and goes on to describe the results of a further 20 experiments made on fibroblasts from embryonic and post-natal mouse tissues.
