Tactical Geo-Engineering: A New Source of Conflict. This series examines new mechanics and concepts in strategy and/or real time tactics games through the perspective of an individual designer. These articles are meant to be accessible to players, writers, and fans of real time strategy, and to introduce new concepts and mechanics to a larger audience. I intend this series to be an enjoyable read with some insightful ideas and suggestions to look into, whether or not you have previous experience with the genre. The basic goal of Rapid Designing is to provide a refreshing look at how a new mechanic can be incorporated into a game or set of mechanics to make a new experience. As a fan of strategy and tactics games, I want to shed light on new areas of strategy. Additionally, I want to find new ways to approach existing mechanics. The hope is that doing so will present innovative mechanics to new players and readers. While this particular series will be a somewhat longer affair, I aim to approach the concept with a new angle. Tactical gameplay is a genre with a lot of variety and a lot of room for new designs and gameplay concepts. For a more in-depth look into current designs and innovations, check out my video series Robo-Tactical.

Gameplay Automation In basic strategy games, certain game elements are automated to a certain degree or in some cases all. What I would like to point out with Rapid Designing is that automation itself is not a game element; it is an underlying mechanical concept that affects the way in which the game plays. With this in mind, think about the mechanics in other genres of strategy and tactics games and the prevalence of game elements in other games. Rapid Designing is about adding a new mechanic to a game or set of mechanics, but not all mechanics need to be touched at all. As a former designer of Steamworks, a title that had a wealth of mechanics, I found that although players initially wanted certain mechanics to be in a game, in practice they ended up being a distraction, slowing down the game to a crawl and overall restricting the creative play style. The design process I want to share with you today is something I created to get around this problem. What is Rapid Designing? In Rapid Designing, I wanted to find a way to speed up the game design process without hindering the player experience. In order to do this, I wanted to find a new way of designing games. That's why this

Nightfall® is a cooperative, multi-player Dungeons & Dragons® adventure game designed for 3-5 new or experienced Dungeon Masters (DM) who want to use popular Dungeons & Dragons® adventure paths as source material for their next campaign. Unlike most tabletop RPG games, Nightfall offers a limited number of professional-quality adventure paths, designed to create a more formal, serialized campaign that encourages the player characters to grow, level up, and learn. Each of the adventures are independent of each other, and instead culminate in a climactic final encounter that charts the direction for the next adventure. When the player characters complete Nightfall, they become certified Guild Wars Specialists, and new characters begin at 3rd level. Intended For The Following Playable via Live Chat with a Dungeon Master, over the Internet or a Private IM Service Designed to Support: DM & Players From 3-5 Characters (experienced players and new players) Designed By: Play-by-forum, live chat Dungeons & Dragons® Sessions Buyer's Remorse Free—Nightfall is a completely stand-alone adaption of the Guild Wars Demonweb Saga, so it includes everything that Players need to run a Nightfall campaign (including official maps, printouts, and other information) but no Dungeon Master material whatsoever. Now, in our darkest hour, monsters have multiplied. The covens have driven us into the abyss and, in their concerted efforts to take over the world, they have somehow created Nightfall—a place where the players and players alone decide the story! The fighting game begins with a black screen and a small box, on which appears the word "Ninja". At this point, two ninjas jump in a square. In this small square, you must attack your opponent with punches, kicks, and jumping. You must defeat your enemies to win the fight. If your opponent gets knocked out, they can be revived by using a special item called a "revive". Those revived are returned to the bottom of the square. At any time, you can use a shuriken to deal additional damage. You can break and wield any wall, even those that you are in, using your fists. You can climb high-level walls. The goal is to reach the top and live to fight another day. There are different stages. Each character has a special ability that can be employed in battle. If you win, you will be rewarded with points. You get medals for using strong moves. And for winning. You are also rewarded with special items and secret levels. You can also form a team of up to 3 players, each with a copy of the game. You can use a "revive" item to revive your comrades. Victory screen awards points for each character. Defeat enemies to gain points. You will not know that you are fighting an AI opponent until you reach the screen with the word "Ninja". Because of this, you can't play the game just to learn the moves. You must fight against your AI opponent. To become better at this game you can compare your points with other players. The point of contention here is the game score. You can switch between two types of fighting. You can hold down the button, A, or, if you are on the PlayStation 2, you can press the button X. In the first mode, you can choose a character or select one by code. The other mode is much faster. These are the two modes. One is the first battle against A, and the other is the first battle. The player of the first battle is a small circle when the game is played. This circle is usually the last character to fight. A screen will appear and you will fight an AI opponent. It is possible to compare scores between two players. Winning is based on points. The more points you have, the better your score. Each character has
