Q: Can lenses with different focal lengths be used on a single camera? Can I use my camera body for various ranges and lenses on it? For instance: I use 50mm f/1.8 and I use 24mm f/2.8. Can I switch from 50mm to 24mm to switch between shallow and deep focus? A: Most of your lenses have a range of focal lengths. This means that you are using a lens that has a certain focal length and a certain field of view. In photography, it is possible to "zoom in" and "zoom out" to achieve various focal lengths. Thus you can achieve your first requirement of switching between shallow and deep focus (and also the range). However, you can never go beyond the focal length you have chosen. Imagine it like this: you have a 50mm lens, which has a focal length of 50mm. You zoom out to, say, 200mm. This is 20% longer than 50mm. Therefore you are now looking at a 200mm lens, which still has a 50mm focal length. You need to stop down a bit to use the full 200mm range. The stopdown is done by either adjusting the diaphragm or the aperture. Now you can zoom out again to, say, 300mm and use
