Oregon's decision to stop recognizing the marriage of same-sex couples is the latest in a long line of turning back the clock on the U.S. LGBT community, writes Daniel Baldwin. The popular definition of marriage — a union between one man and one woman — had long been the subject of heated debate. The counterintuitive, though uncharitable, idea that procreation is not necessary in a marriage has enjoyed an increasing acceptance among members of the Western world, including some religious groups. Yet this social change has been seen as an affront to the deeply held values of other cultures and religions, who place a larger emphasis on procreation as a reason for marriage. Whether marriage is about procreation or merely about love and companionship, it has been an uniting principle for many cultures. For example, Indonesians, Ghanaians and Zulus all consider marriage to be an expression of the union of man and wife. This is not the case for the Scots, who have never used the term "marriage" for an exclusive legal union between couples, instead referring to "marriages." The United States was, for most of its history, a culture that kept its citizens united in marriage for several reasons, the first of which was to keep children healthy. Children often died of diseases that were transmitted through a mother's womb, and community leaders therefore prohibited marriage outside of the confines of a heterosexual union. While this no longer matters much to a country that has largely banned large swathes of its citizenry from being born (estimates put the number of US citizens born to illegal immigrant parents at 5 million), the counterargument is that "culturally exclusive" marriage is still a form of discrimination. These arguments often prove to be bad news for the U.S.'s LGBT community, as the idea of marriage is at the heart of the battle to achieve LGBT equality in America. In 1996, the U.S. Supreme Court found that marriage laws denying same-sex couples equal protection under the law were unconstitutional and granted a same-sex couple in Massachusetts the right to marry. Since then, the U.S. Supreme Court has argued that anti-discrimination measures protecting against the denial of marriage, like those of the Civil Rights Act, must apply to everyone, including same-sex couples. In addition to the Supreme Court's ruling, the Equal Opportunity Act in 1964, the most important piece of civil rights legislation of the

Q: The event handler is being triggered and I don't know why I am trying to get a Raspberry Pi to respond to pressing one of these 3 buttons. I have a virtual keyboard, but it is always stuck in the down position (the 'enter' key).
`import RPi.GPIO as GPIO
import RPi.GPIO.LockedMCP3008 as LTC
GPIO.setmode(GPIO.BCM)
GPIO.setwarnings(False)
GPIO.setup(23,GPIO.IN, pull_up_down = GPIO.PUD_UP)
GPIO.setup(15,GPIO.IN, pull_up_down = GPIO.PUD_UP)
GPIO.setup(16,GPIO.IN, pull_up_down = GPIO.PUD_UP)
GPIO.setwarnings(True)
def button_handler(event):
 print("Press down or up")
 if event.key == "up":
 print(True)
 elif event.key == "down":
 print(False)
 else:
 print(True)
GPIO.add_event_detect(23, GPIO.FALLING, callback=button_handler)
GPIO.add_event_detect(15, GPIO.FALLING, callback=button_handler)
GPIO.add_event_detect(16, GPIO.FALLING, callback=button_handler)
while True:
 print("test")
 if GPIO.input(23) == True:
 print("pressed")
 else:
 print("not pressed")`
This code is just a small snippet of what I tried. I've read other questions about this problem, but most have solutions that did not work for me. Any help would be greatly appreciated.
A: This will set the input to "false" when the key is pressed down and release the input when released up:
`GPIO.add_event_detect(23, GPIO.DOWN, callback`
