Loss of normal expression of fragile histidine triad protein (FHIT) is associated with the progression of biliary tract cancer. The fragile histidine triad (FHIT) protein is known to be a tumor suppressor, but its roles in cancer biology remain unknown. In this study, we analyzed the expression of FHIT protein in patients with biliary tract cancer by immunohistochemistry using the tissue microarray technique. Loss of FHIT protein expression was detected in 73% of the bile duct carcinomas and in 42% of the gallbladder carcinomas. However, the protein was not lost in the cholangiocarcinoma, whereas positive immunostaining for FHIT protein was observed in the lymph node metastatic foci. The loss of FHIT protein expression was significantly more frequent in biliary tract cancers with a stage II or III tumor (77%) than in those with a stage I tumor (42%). Although a correlation was not seen between the loss of the protein expression and the occurrence of lymph node metastasis, the loss of FHIT protein expression tended to be associated with the high frequency of distant metastasis. Furthermore, the biliary tract cancers with the loss of FHIT protein expression were found to have a more aggressive clinical course than those with positive expression. We thus found that loss of FHIT protein expression may be related to the progression of biliary tract cancers.
