GenoMation v2.2.2 RC0232 MD CCCompany4Electrophoretic patterns of proteinuria in NZB/B1NJ mice with lupus glomerulonephritis. The proteinuria of mice bearing the NZB/B1NJ strain of systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) can be separated into four predominant peaks on electrophoretic separations. Each of the four peaks corresponds to a known urinary protein that is present in large quantities in NZB/B1NJ mice with lupus nephritis. Peak 1, a component of approximately 50 kDa, is composed of serum albumin and a component of approximately 27 kDa which cross-reacts with antiserum to the 27-kDa polypeptide of the high-molecular-weight type of mouse major histocompatibility complex (MHC) class I antigen, Ag B220. Peak 2, a component of approximately 30 kDa, is composed of albumin and a component of approximately 15 kDa which cross-reacts with antiserum to Ag B220. Peak 3, a component of approximately 25 kDa, is composed of serum albumin, immunoglobulin (Ig)A, IgG, a component of approximately 8.5 kDa which cross-reacts with antiserum to the high-molecular-weight type of mouse MHC class I antigen, and a component of approximately 14 kDa, which cross-reacts with antiserum to the heavy chain of the murine alpha 2 chain of complement (C5). Peak 4, a component of approximately 10 kDa, is composed of IgA and IgG. Most of the proteinuria observed in NZB/B1NJ mice with lupus nephritis is composed of a single peak, peak 1, which accounts for the great majority of proteinuria in these mice with lupus nephritis. It is suggested that peak 1 is composed of murine albumin, murine C5, and murine C3. Proteinuria was detected before the development of renal lesions that is characteristic of lupus nephritis in NZB/B1NJ mice. The proteinuria was associated with lowered levels of serum albumin and immunoglobulins in the urine, decreased
