What's new in TanksEscape:

Brand-Building Fuse 3/30/2015 09:05 pm (photos by Danny Clinch) When hip-hop first began, there were few parameters – many had left the world of selling-out and decided they didn't want to be just another rapper in a crowd of other rappers, saying all the same things, singing the same hooks... The Pankapu team wanted to find their own voice – and to do so, they had to fight to be heard, at every stage of the ride. Been years since the first Pankapu single was released, and the team has since released multiple albums and EPs, each that builds the next, bigger, and louder step forward. If you're a fan of the band (and you're clearly a fan of hip-hop), it's safe to say that for Pankapu, it has been a long, but steady climb. Today, Pankapu is releasing all-new music with a brand-building fuse. Hardly did they build a mountain to reach, just that the climb has been steady, and now, they're prepared to expand in every way; new levels to conquer, bridges to walk and dance across, tightrope-creators to be hurled off it with reckless abandon. Brand-building music is music that has a purpose – music that pushes an agenda, aligns the most honest intentions and resonates in a way that's permanently in the background. The music itself should be timeless and as essential as breathing. Brand-building music is often difficult to grasp because it's subtle – very often, the purpose isn't there in the lyrics. Brand-building stories are about themselves. More importantly, you don't consider the backstory, because it's besides the point, it's what they do. They're the wheels on this music – it provides a road map, with all the fancy jazz dancing, that makes sense of where they've been and what's to come. Brand-building music sticks around in the background and guides you, letting you know where to come next, and what you can expect, and that's everything. Over the years, there have been so many forms of music that have been memorable, unforgettable, and left such a lasting and positive emotional impact on the players
