the secrets of da vinci game crack da vinci's secret the forbidden manuscript Fetal myelomatous meningitis in maternal influenza A infection. A pregnant woman presented with fever and myalgias at 15 weeks' gestation. She was thought to have a bacterial infection and received parenteral antibiotics, but developed worsening headaches and disturbed mentation before delivery. She delivered a healthy, apparently well baby at term. Postpartum, she developed focal neurologic deficits and admitted to have had influenza 1 month prior to presentation. Cerebrospinal fluid findings were consistent with myelomatous meningitis, and brain CT scan revealed a small, right-sided posterior fossa lesion. The baby and the mother were treated with antiviral therapy and plasmapheresis. The mother recovered fully, and the baby was well without neurologic sequelae at follow-up. Clinicians should be alert to possible influenza-associated myelomatous meningitis and to complications from influenza in pregnancy. Note: This calendar has been compiled by the Portland office.
