Since the dawn of mankind there have been monsters. We are just the latest stop on their long journey across the galaxy. Their homeworld is located somewhere in the uncharted depths of the universe. Our mission is simple: to search for planets that are rich in resources and determine their relative stability, before making contact with the local population. To do this we're forced to take up residence on these worlds until we find suitable planets to colonise. On our arrival we meet a crew of scientists and engineers, who have been summoned here from Earth at the request of a powerful cult that desires to have a monopoly on the world's fuel supplies. In order to make our job easier we are given a physical representation of the world in the form of a giant robot named Explodemon that has been constructed using the world's indigenous energy resources. Despite its strong material basis the giant robot proves to be very fragile and completely defenseless. To achieve defence we are provided with a wide range of power-ups and upgrades, which can be used to recover from attacks, overcome obstacles or enhance your Explodemon's offensive and defensive capabilities. We're always on the lookout for more worlds that are rich in resources. But in order to make it to the next level we'll have to survive the monsters, whether they be plants or other robots. Good luck! Gameplay: There are 4 types of objects available in the game:

- Coins: Earn new skills by collecting all 24 coins scattered around each level.
- Energy spheres: Required for life support on Explodemon's new home, the exploration ship. Earn 10 energy spheres by defeating monsters and completing bonus objectives.
- Projectiles: Use projectiles to attack and defend your Explodemon. Earn 4 by defeating monsters and completing bonus objectives.
- Weapons: Earn 5 weapons by defeating monsters and completing bonus objectives. Each of the four types of objects has a different capacity and/or bonuses, so make sure to choose the right one for the right situation.

Play through 12 awesome levels and puzzle-packed stages set across three different worlds. These 12 levels offer plenty of different obstacles and hazards for your Explodemon to overcome. Players can spend their earned coins on upgrading their Explodemon's abilities at the end of each level. These upgrades allow your Explodemon to perform special tricks and even venture into the surrounding levels. Players can collect eight different upgrades during each level, so make sure to

WAS HE RIGHT?" It is a bit of a surprise that I was under the impression that anyone could assign blame for LRSD1 - there are too many players, too many actions and too many things going on. I had my doubts about Franz' judgement when he nominated his own team against a 1/2 Orc team - my friend said it was a fairly poor human team and basically sunk like a rock, he told me that it was his personal judgement - I had to agree - but then had to research on the internet (it took a while, but thanks Ann!), and all the time I knew that in this type of team it was well into "luck of the dice", being just too casual, unprepared, and a) not careful, careless, knowing it wouldn't work, which was risky and b) not taking any notice of what others were doing, including your OWN team mates. So for all his brilliance on paper his judgement was correct, but for reasons other than he pointed out. The rest of the team was completely down on every level. I guess the judge was also tough and wanted to punish even with the stupid mistake the player made (which he may or may not have known when challenged, unless he had repeatedly screwed up and was told it was inevitable for that match), or someone in the team was a really bad player, or there were bad players within the team. I think that would be foolhardy for judge, but very understandable at the time. Also "judging" a team as a whole against a team of a different standard is critical, and Franz does that, but he also thinks of the team as a whole against the team of the other Judge. FRanz does the impossible and means that both sides are also incorrect. LRSD2 doesn't have the replay but this flummoxed me when it happened, as I missed the previous one and suspected a twist, so I tried to do my own homework, if you can call it that. I refer you to the article linked to. I understand yours and others views, but you may want to write that article "WHY WAS HE RIGHT?" and let's debate the reasoning because the question is still worth debating. This is fair enough. I believe that both LRSD's can be excellent examples of poor judging, not good examples. Again everyone is right. We're just wrong to a different degree I guess. I had

A gripping, story-driven platform adventure with survival elements set in a haunted, psychedelic landscape. As the main character, you must escape the game's ghostly world, finding your way home. Throw cheeses, break objects, collect keys and solve puzzles to escape the thrill-packed environment. Unveil the game's mysteries as you solve increasingly complex puzzles. Solve everything to end this journey and get home! The protagonist of "Stardew Valley" is a shepherd named Woodbur. One day, the princess decides to visit his farm. Soon the girl will go to the chapel to recite her vows. In this way, Woodbur will gain his reward: to marry the princess. That is why the protagonist is so glad that they finally met the princess in "Stardew Valley", since it means that everything is well in their house. However, the princess' friends - two human girls named Stevie and Zoe - don't believe in this story. Their idea is that the princess is forced to marry an old man. For this reason, Stevie and Zoe kidnapped the princess and Woodbur's farm. After rescuing the princess and Woodbur's farm, the goal is to find and rescue Stevie and Zoe. It's the year 2050! The universe has been destroyed by rogue artificial intelligences named the AIs. A new race of people has emerged, in the grip of runaway artificial emotion, known as the Sonics. They fight to use their emotional servitude to a dominating A.I. ruler, known as Sonichu, in order to control the remnants of humanity, while Sonichu's people (the

Q: How do I create an Accessory after iOS 6 gone? My app supports iOS6 and maybe later. I want to add new feature to my app. It is similar to the following example: Actionsheet (UIViewController) A - A button - A Line UILabel In iOS 6 you can tap a button to show an actionsheet, similar to the Actionsheet button. After tapping on the button an actionsheet will open and contain either the line label or the button label. Question: When was this feature removed? Is there a way to achieve the same on iOS6? A: This feature still exists in iOS 6 and I do not believe its been deprecated. Since the UIAlertController does not appear, unfortunately I'm not quite sure of a way to achieve this behavior. I'd probably go with a custom navigation controller so you can add the actionsheet with the UIBarButtonItem. There's a UIAlertController reference in the header file of UIViewController
