What's new in The Wednesday Soundtrack:

Records Flatshot Records is a defunct record label from Rye, New York, on Long Island owned by the Radio Squad entertainment group. Originally, a talent show on Long Island in the late 1970s, it eventually turned into a record label. It was started by Jim Bowmer, a friend of other music entrepreneur Darin Raymond. Flatshot/Harvest Records Flatshot Records, previously one of the two record labels that dealt with Harlettes, released the "first true disco album" - a 1983 album entitled Disco Fever. The Harlettes "Harlettes", as the name suggests, were a group of girls who recorded their music on the Flatshot Records label. Sydney Andrews released two albums in 1979 called Harlettes and Harlettes II. Shirley Cicileo was the main singer and performer. Dr. Wonder-Sand became the DJ who was mostly responsible for putting together the music to the 'Harlettes' shows. Sandi Wharton was also a member of the group. She released a single, "Living Divorce", in 1981. Flatshot Records Releases The Flatshot Show (1979) Disco Fever (a compilation of Sydney Andrews' "Harlettes" and a few other singles), 1980. The singles were produced by Jim Bowmer and dubbed "The Flatshot Show". "Overcome", a single which had been on the market for a couple years by the time Disco Fever was released, is included. Wharton continued to write some of the songs on the album. "The Flatshot Show" featured many of the young people in the original group. Sandi Wharton and Doctor Wonder Sand appeared in the promotional video for the release, along with Dr. Wonder-Sand's other young musical protégé and 'colleague', Andy Allo. It marked the first video by Sandi Wharton although it remains unknown how much she contributed. The Flatshot Club (1980) A few singles, and one album of music for the "Harlettes". All tracks were produced by Jim Bowmer and dubbed "The Flatshot Club" which also marked the first album by Sandi Wharton in her career. Sandi Wharton & More (1981) Various performers and a few production credits such as "Living Divorce". Flatshot (1983) Sandi
