The nitrogen fixation protein nifH, a key enzyme for dinitrogen (N₂) fixation, is tightly controlled at the transcriptional level. The nifH gene in Rhodococcus elongatus CH34, an N₂-fixing bacterium, was cloned and the promoter region determined. Deletion of the nifF gene resulted in a 60% decrease in nifH expression, which also impaired the expression of the nifUSV, PFOR, NAP and ferredoxin genes. Deletion of the glnR gene, which is directly or indirectly repressed by NifF, resulted in a 30% decrease in the expression of nifH, nifF, nifUSV, PFOR and NAP. In addition, the nifE gene, which encodes a homologue of ArcB of N₂-fixing Gram-positive bacteria, was transcribed under the control of the nifUSV, PFOR and NAP promoters. These results indicated that the NifF protein is necessary for the activation of the nifH gene in R. elongatus.# Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one # or more contributor license agreements.

Gulliâ€™s defeat of a walled camp had many implications to the future course of the war. He had â€œbeaten the gatesâ€. If he could control the city, he couldÃ—,â—,çt be captured or killed. This marked the beginning of the Skythian â€œsuccession period.Â . When Gulli entered the city, he was thrilled by the sudden change in fortune. As he set himself up, he thought in all seriousness of making himself the ruler of the city.Â . Since the Skythians were in a city, Gulli should have been hard pressed to be captured. However, some of the most powerful men of the city noticed Gulliâ€™s venture.Â . Gulliâ€™s strategy of ruling â€œby stealthâ€ failed him when he assumed the
