European Central Bank Policy Was Right, Stiglitz Says (Bloomberg) -- Ten months after the European Central Bank unexpectedly jettisoned stimulus, the International Monetary Fund stands by the policy, which saved the euro and helped the bloc's banks cope with the world's downturn. While some experts are critical, no one doubts it was the right thing to do, said former New York University professor Laurence Summers, now a senior fellow at the Harvard Institute of International Development. "If you want to play the central role, which the euro system has done for half of its existence, you're going to have to do things like (curtail) the bank lending that contributed so much to the instability in Europe and the rest of the world," Summers said at the Center for Global Development in Washington. Summers' comments, made in a speech on July 25, come as ECB policymakers prepare to deliver a key update on monetary policy to the 19-nation currency union's governing council at the end of the

In Japan, a large number of patients have undergone surgical treatment to improve the facial appearance. Therefore, some patients have desire of their photos that they made many years ago. This study evaluated the facial soft tissue changes with aging by digital photographs, and compared these changes among the subjects. The subjects included 167 females and 88 males (298 subjects, aged 30 to 84 years) who had taken photographs of their own faces. These were evaluated by using objective evaluations. Additionally, facial soft tissue profiles were evaluated by the AesthetiX simulation software. The most significant difference in appearance was changes of the mandible and angular deviation of the jawline, which became prominent with aging. Significant differences in the upper 1/3 of the face were also found between the males and females, specifically, the males had a prominent mandible. However, no significant differences were found in the lower 1/3 of the face. These results were similar to those in recent publications. This study revealed that facial soft tissue profiles changed with aging, especially the changes in the mandible and angular deviation of the jawline.. No. 02-1474. In Winston, the court reviewed the complete statutory and regulatory scheme, explained that the structure of the regulations indicated that it is the objector's burden to establish that the notices of intent to sue were inadequate, and concluded that no genuine issues of fact had been raised as to the adequacy of the public notice given the objector. Id. at *4-5. The Defendants object that the Winston decision is not binding, because it represents a different district court than this Court. Furthermore, the Defendants argue that this Court's review is de novo rather than a review of the documents filed in the administrative process, and that, for this reason, the Winston decision is not persuasive. The Court disagrees with the Defendants' characterization of Winston as an opinion from a different district court. This Court is now a Unit of the United States District d0c515b9f4

In a camera of the variable focus type, the position of a focusing lens is changed, i.e. the focal length thereof is changed, to allow a focusing lens to be moved from a shortest focal length position to a longest focal length position by a single mechanical movement. The photographing lens also is of the variable focus type, in which a focusing lens can be moved to an infinite focal length position by mechanical movement. The present applicant has earlier proposed a focusing lens actuation device of the type disclosed in Japanese Utility Model Publication No. 48-16192. This lens actuating device comprises a stationary support member which is engaged with a hole-shaped cam on the focusing ring of the focusing lens; a pinion which is engaged with the cam and which is rotatably disposed on the support member; and a gear ring which is engaged with the pinion and which is disposed on a shaft of
