Reliability and validity of the activity self-efficacy and self-efficacy for self-care scale in individuals with chronic low back pain. A growing number of health care providers in Australia are providing education programs that aim to increase a person's ability to manage their own chronic conditions (active self-care). Many of these programs use educational materials to assist individuals to develop these skills, however few instruments have been developed that measure actual active self-care in the participants. A valid and reliable instrument is needed to measure active self-care. A study was undertaken to assess the reliability and validity of two instruments: the Activity Self-Efficacy and the Self-Efficacy for Self-Care Scale. A total of 297 adults with chronic low back pain completed the self-report questionnaires at baseline and follow-up and 4 months later. Test-retest reliability was found to be high for the Activity Self-Efficacy scale (Spearman's  $r=0.93$ ; p
