Polycystic ovary syndrome, PCOS, is the leading cause of female infertility. The incidence and prevalence of PCOS is estimated to be 6.1 and 7%, respectively, in the U.S. Most women with PCOS are not diagnosed until after they have had children. PCOS is marked by a wide spectrum of clinical features, including hyperandrogenism, chronic anovulation, and insulin resistance. Women with PCOS have a 63% chance of miscarrying a pregnancy, and PCOS complicates 1 in 20 pregnancies in the United States. Despite extensive evidence for the negative reproductive consequences of PCOS, no medical treatment is available to prevent miscarriage. Women with PCOS require more treatment cycles to conceive than healthy women of similar age, and these additional treatment cycles may contribute to miscarriage. The fact that no medical treatment is available to improve reproductive outcomes in women with PCOS suggests that PCOS and its sequelae of infertility and miscarriage are the consequence of a pre-existing suboptimal state that is perpetuated by the loss of reproductive function. The progression of infertility with age in women with PCOS is not associated with histological evidence of degenerative changes in the ovary. Thus, one possible explanation of the infertility and miscarriage is that in a woman with a long history of PCOS, reproductive function has already begun to decline prior to the emergence of significant reproductive dysfunction. In this study we propose to perform a retrospective

Renault Dialogys 4.8 2011-2012 in SPXÂ .Analysis of boron species contained in water and sediments of the Yellow River reveals recent phytoplankton blooms at four collection sites in May and June 2014. Phytoplankton blooms are an important source of dissolved organic carbon, a key nutrient for rivermangroves ecosystems. This study presents an identification of boron species dissolved in water samples of the Yellow River, which is potentially a key nutrient for mangroves. A capillary electrophoresis ion-pairing technique coupled with electrochemical detection has been applied to detect boron species in waters of the Yellow River at five sampling sites in May and June 2014. The results indicate that the boron species detection rate is higher (80.2%) in the late winter-early spring (Jan, Feb, Mar, Apr and May) than in the late spring (Jun), which means that phytoplankton blooms may be the main source of boron, and the total concentration of boron in water is from 0.26 to 0.51 mg L<sup>-1</sup>. Based on the large variation in the concentration of boron species at these sites, May was identified as a high water/sediment boron load ratio period. In addition, two boron peaks were detected on the graphite electrode, which could not be easily identified and were classified as unknown ions. These unknown ions may be pyrophosphate and tribasic/cubic borate. The boron levels at all collection sites were related to the food chain in the Yellow River, which is an important transmission path for nutrients from the river to mangroves./* Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); * you may not use this file except in compliance with the License. * You may obtain a copy of the License at * * * * Unless required by applicable law or agreed to in writing, software * distributed under the License is distributed on an "AS IS" BASIS, * WITHOUT WARRANTIES OR CONDITIONS OF ANY KIND, either express or implied. * See the License for the specific language governing permissions and * limitations under the License. */ package org.
