Sheffield and Rotherham councils are embroiled in their own high-profile child abuse case, with officials being accused of turning a "blind eye" to abuse of young girls in their area for many years. As part of the International Children's Rights Institute, an organisation based in Coventry, ICRI has been working with local councils across England to put in place some basic child protection procedures. A girl from Rotherham, who was only named as EM, described abuse from her stepfather's friends in 2013. Her mother had taken the girl out of the town when she was aged four, but she returned because of problems with social services. She said she was raped by the stepfather's friends at his flat, including one of the stepfather's brothers. Em's stepfather said he was able to leave the family when she was aged four. He claims that soon after she returned they fell out and he left the house Credit: Instagram On top of that, they reportedly told her that her mother had "killed her".
