In your context, its irrelevant, but, as I said, I can see it being important. Whilst you are correct about Mr Manley I should qualify that by saying the shouting at the Saxon singer is the bit he does that you can't avoid. Lest you think that I'm being patronising or demeaning I like the songs on that CD myself. Plus I actually quite like Saxon from their earlier days. BUT, I was just trying to point out how refreshing it is to not see that in the online world. I'm sure it happens. But its so rare in these days of the 140 character meme to see someone open up and say "hey, I agree with what you're saying" Yep, the same way Mr Manley's aqua-mania is irrelevant to this discussion. 1st occurrence of a specific value with a column ordering I have a table full of event records, each event has a start and end time. What I want to do is select all records with a start time that occurs on a particular day. My current solution is to get all records and then sort them by start time and then get the first record in the resultant list. I'm sure there's a better way to do this. My table structure is something like this: ID |starttime |endtime |location If I've got a start time of 17:00:00 and I'm looking for records with start times on the 21st January, I want the record with the start time of 17:00:00 on the 21st to be returned. How can I do this? A: If you need a record with that start time, then you can use the LAG analytic function like this: `SELECT * FROM (SELECT ID, starttime, endtime, LAG(starttime, 1, NULL) OVER (ORDER BY starttime) AS prev_st, LAG(endtime, 1, NULL) OVER (ORDER BY starttime) AS prev_en FROM T ) A WHERE starttime = '17:00:00';` Q: Данные в localStorage на другом са  b7e8fdf5c8

There are some reports floating around saying that the Democratic Party needs to change its name. A few people are even telling you that if they are wrong they will eat their political party — a social experiment that has been on the books in Australia for a while. If you go to a few social media pages, you'll see a number of memes about the Democrats needing a new name, including one funny meme that has a picture of George W. Bush with the caption, "Democrats are not tough enough." In other words, they could just take a cue from the Republicans, who have taken the "modern conservatism" mantle. Here are a few thoughts on the subject: 1. The Democratic Party is a much smaller part of the American landscape than the GOP. In 2018, Republicans drew 3.3 million more votes. Their popular vote share is about 3 points higher than the Democrats. 2. The Democrats need to become more like the Republicans. Even among Democrats, a smaller number are voting for the Democrats than are voting for Republicans. 3. The Democratic Party is a party of the left. They are the party of fighting crime and the party of immigrant and minority rights. They're the party that wants to make sure a college student can go to college free of cost and the party that is likely pushing a bill this week to allow illegal immigrants to have a path to citizenship. They are the party in favor of Social Security and Medicare, and they are the party that is the party of the Democrats. 4. The Democratic Party is not the party of practical and efficient government. The Democratic Party is a party of soaring rhetoric about how government can lift people out of the poverty and despair and secure their rights in ways the Republicans just can't. They are the party of Medicare, and the party of the Afro-Americans, and the party of the liberals — that is the party that led the effort to pass the Affordable Care Act. 5. Democratic Party is the "cool" party. It's not politically correct to like the Democrats. They are the party that says, 💎
