Hate the control when playing games? Well, crossCode is designed for you. CrossCode is a game which mixes old school gameplay with a new setting and new gameplay features: It's all about you controlling a CrossCode! Now! Play The CrossCode: • Curses as little as possible and gives you full control over your newly bought shotgun. • The name's James Bond, and you're now on a mission to blow up a Nuclear submarine. • Nothing fancy, but it works. Unfortunately, you have been found and your life is in danger. • But that is why you bought the CrossCode: The crossCode by R3N own the Secret Service. • You're the only one who can use the CrossCode to hunt down other players to kill. • Or start new clans and establish your own crossCode. • You will get famous and earn the respect of your peers. • You can buy different items from a store – to increase your strength. • You will have to catch a flying car to increase the height of your jump and thus reach the other side of the map more quickly. • In the city you will find more than 60 different buildings. • What building do you want to shoot first? Features: • More than 150+ Levels • More than 80+ mobs • 8 different weapons • More than 15 different types of avatars • More than 20 different items • More than 80+ different accessories • More than 50+ classes • 6 unique "Evolved" Clans • More than 10 weapon variants • More than 10 accessories • More than 60 different buildings • 50+ maps of more than 25x25 squares • 4 different levels of difficulty • 3 different time modes • It's all about you being the player, not the "crossCode". • The game is not tied to crossCode's maps. • The CrossCode is an awesome concept, but the player is more important than the crossCode. • The game is Free, so players can experience the CrossCode for themself and are not bothered about spending money. Important • The game requires an Internet connection to play. • The game is supported by ads that appear and disappear between levels. • The ads provide direct access to the "store". • The ads can be disabled

The core of this game can be summed up in three words: It looks great and the gameplay is enjoyable. At the same time it's not quite what you might expect from the basic premise of "run around and shoot everything" and even that is super embellished. This game presents something new, as a simulation game it can be compared to the top tier PC and console shooters (of the latter I always turn to Ace Combat games). The design of its campaign is amazingly diverse, the number of environments, the type of missions and enemies are a great range. The campaign is divided into a Story campaign and a Special Missions, where players can go on quests and hunt down some unique objects and items. The story campaign is divided into three parts, each of which stands on its own, and are interrelated in a unique way. Overall it's a well crafted storyline and very good writing. As a story it also manages to make you care and also fear for the lives of the characters and their survival.The plot is very "": you play as a squad of 2 or 3 soldiers with an overall goal. There's a beginning and an end, but you can choose where you go in between the 3 story arcs. What starts out simple soon turns into a very engaging tale of revenge, betrayal, betrayals, thievery and backstabbing. The campaign is very well-written, with great dialogues, interesting characters and scenarios. To sum up: a game with a great singleplayer campaign, a few quirks (ex. having to preload parts of the maps on the map and getting stuck), really good replayability thanks to the special missions, well-written storyline, well-implemented RPG elements, great replayabilty, a great AI. All in all, a good multiplayer game, with fun mechanics and good MP maps. The game has been through many iterations, and everything has been fixed. But the original game has several problems. Sometimes the AI is unpredictable and can't always help you out and sometimes it will help out at the most strange times, and it doesn't seem to learn well from you're actions. We have a limit of around 40 entities, which means that not everything in the map is alive. AI units like tanks, air strikes and such won't spawn right away, and sometimes even rockets can take a while. Fortunately, it seems to use a numerical stat for things like coming? "To borrow from an old expression, we live in an age of 'digital disintermediation'—when companies that were once third-party intermediary between buyer and seller are losing that position to non-profits, co-ops, and new kinds of technology-based marketplaces."—Joseph A. Grundfest In a recent op-ed for the Washington Post, tech investor John Doerr argued that Silicon Valley, despite its competitive advantage in terms of talent, is having trouble keeping pace with the third phase of the digital transformation: the transition to a fully-connected, global, capital-efficient, attention economy where the Internet still serves as the primary platform for transactions. The social and collaborative tendencies of the cloud have created a scenario where: "Facebook, Google, Amazon, and Twitter are all topping 100 million daily active users. The top four social networks represent about half of all visits to U.S. news websites." – Bill Bishop "There is a new magnetism to web services that is changing the contours of technology and commerce. The most dramatic of these is the rise of the smartphone, which 'reverses' the desktop, now being accessed primarily from a user's home, not from a keyboard and desktop PC. Most users connect to the cloud (either through a data plan or via user-initiated downloads). Mobile applications often compete for space with other utility apps like texting, productivity tools, and game engines. Yet the important access point to the cloud is still a mobile Internet connection—not broadband and certainly not the fixed telecom infrastructure of the 1990s."—The Rise of the Ancillary Apps – Jenna Oxman Several factors contribute to this shift. These include: (1) manufacturing ubiquity; (2) measurement prowess; (3) historical accident; (4) competition; (5) purpose; (6) data trawling; (7) open platforms; and (8) informal alliances. Manufacturing Ubiquity Fact: of the 100 million smartphones currently in use in the U.S., 97 million run on Apple's proprietary operating system, iOS. On October 10, 2013, the number of active Apple iOS devices had surpassed 50 million, and accounted for 69% of the total smartphone market. Much more of the Apple device market is composed of higher-end devices (mainly iPhones), and much of the
