If your time is up, you are already dead. When I was being trained by the British army, people tell them that they would be killed in the training because they wouldn't have any chance. You always go for your life but they will and your training will make sure you have the chance to do so. "When you aim at nothing, you will hit it every time!" ~ Katsu-Tai Actually, if you are brought into a situation where you find you have the time to change your mind, you've already made a grave mistake. If you're holding a gun on someone, then chances are they're holding the first one. A pair of mother and daughter cybergangs have been tracking the construction of $320 million Clearwire's ultrafast 5G network, which is being built in Kansas City, Mo. "We were just like, oh, I wonder how fast this is going to go, and then they built the towers," said Karen Jarrell, who used to be a software engineer at Google before pursuing a career as a software security consultant. "And it was like, wow, it's going fast." Jarrell became aware of Project Loon, a research project at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Facebook, through tweets from Hacker News. The idea behind Project Loon is to use a network of airborne computers the size of a weather balloon to beam internet access to rural areas, which have been left behind because they don't have the wired infrastructure to connect to the internet. Clearwire's network will be the first to use the sixth mobile generation, or sixth mobile generation, or 6G, (hence the "6G" part of the name). The first 4G networks launched in early 2010, and the fifth generation, or e79caf774b
